Supplementary Fig. 1. Barlow’s disease. In Barlow’s disease the most common finding is diffuse excess tissue, the mitral valve size is generally large, and the myxomatous pathological changes usually affects multiple segments, eventually resulting in a “floppy mitral valve”. An additional typical finding is diffuse chordal elongation and rupture (arrow) (see the text for more explanations).